Transcriber's Office
FLOOR DEBATE

April 22, 2003      LB 759

we argue that, and I got a couple strong opinionated nephews. I don't know where they get it from. It can't be me, but anyway, you know, they...and we do, we discuss heavily. We can't even agree in our own family. We can't even agree in our own family. How do we expect this body to agree completely? But I think this time maybe we will try to come up with something, but it's really, really important, because the people at home are expecting something. Believe me, they're expecting some big things here. So what do we do on this issue here? You know, this could be on the big one. This could be the big one and times are short. It's easy to add a percent when you're going up. My 13 years here...yes, it's been 13 years, I can't hardly believe it, but it's always what percent we going to add? What percent we going to add? Now it's what percent we're going to take away? That just makes your heart drop out of your feet, you know. What percent you going to take away? I hope this doesn't come around but once every 30-40 years, but it might. Who knows? But this could be the big one. Let's do it right. Senator Brashear has a point, Senator Landis has some points, and everybody here. It's one of these bills that everybody on this floor will probably want to talk to, talk to, talk at, with or whatever, and you should. Everybody that's home is going to be listening to you. We want to make our point clear, and I guess I better be quiet and let somebody else talk. If everybody takes five minutes, we're going to be here a long time, and we should be here a long time on this bill. Thank you.

SPEAKER BROMM: Thank you, Senator Cudaback. Senator Jensen.

SENATOR JENSEN: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Member of the Legislature, when we started this budget-cutting process and, insofar as I'm concerned, our shortfall really started in the fall of 2000. We didn't start to see that until midyear of 2001. But as we began that and we began the budget-cutting process, we've cut just barely to keep us about even. And then we went into special session and again we cut no more than what we had to, matter of fact even a little less than what we should have. And I went through that exercise here a week ago, as Senator Brashear so aptly spoke of really about a month ago, when talk to your accountant. And the accountant I use is a
