FLOOR DEBATE

April 30, 2003 LB 806

So they come in with a subsequent claim based on...and the Claims Board has reviewed and found out those checks were never cashed, and so they allowed them to submit a new claim in order to be paid. And it's happened almost...I don't...I can't remember a year that I've been on the claims...or, on the Business and Labor Committee that there hasn't been a claim filed of some kind that you're talking about.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Well, there's a handful here. And it's just kind of interesting that people forget about a $20,000 check. I mean, it's different if it's lost in the mail and that type of thing. But...

SENATOR VRTISKA: You know, we did some investigating in that purposely, because we were concerned the same as you are, to find out why would somebody have a $20,000 check and not cash it. Well, we were told that some of it's done through their bookkeeping process, and either they weren't notified immediately, and either the checks were lost...they weren't even sure...or else they were misplaced or something happened to them. And after...either through an audit process or through a review of their accountant, they found out those checks were never cashed. So they come in with a subsequent request for the money. And as I indicated, they assured us, and documented the fact that in fact those checks were never cashed. So they're outstanding. Now, there was a case happened a few years ago where the person didn't apply and finally, after five years, filed claims. We disallowed all those claims that were within...that were out of the statute of limitation. And they kept coming back wanting their money. But you can't...we couldn't do anything about it. But we did give them up to the time that they were actually within the statute of limitation. So it seems rather strange to me. And in fact, if I had those kind of claims, I'd know that I wasn't paid. But apparently some companies don't keep that good of records.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Thank you.

SPEAKER BROMM: Thank you, Senator Wehrbein. Senator Vrtiska, your light is next.
