Only the big operations. Why don't you let them go do their own work? If Senator Wehrbein is here, I'd like to ask him a question.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Would you respond, Senator Wehrbein.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Wehrbein, you probably were occupied and didn't get to hear me answer...

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: A little bit.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...the question.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Yes, sir.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay, but here's the question I would put to you. First of all, I believe that this bill is in the best interest or primarily to benefit those large operations. The little ones don't have to worry. The large ones are the ones being turned away. Why do we have to do the work for these operations instead of letting them send their representatives around and inquire of the county boards whether or not their county is amenable? And if not, isn't that a quick way to get the answer they say they are looking for?

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: That would be one way to do it, Senator Chambers. I would recognize that. Sometimes, in practical life, what appears to be doable or acceptable or whatever is...minds change. I could give you a personal example from 20 years ago that having to do with sludge from Omaha. County boards had it, sounded like a good idea, but it took 15 years before it actually happened because of the lack of community acceptance early on. So that's the dilemma sometimes. After discussions, the acceptance is not as readily as when it first appears.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Well, with this procedure, during the hearings and other proceedings that may take place, public rejection could be expressed then and the county could certainly
