university, no nothing. I've got nothing. I don't think you do either, Senator Redfield. We have districts that don't have any state facilities, so I'm going to come at this without any particular need to defend it for any particular reason, but actually for a very specific reason. Saying that we should close a facility because we don't like spending money on Corrections, to me, isn't getting at the crux of the problem. The crux of the problem is we've doubled our prison population in ten years. Now some people say, gee, that's great; we got everybody locked up. But take a look at who is there. We are locking up people we didn't used to lock up. We have a lot of people with mental illness. They end up there because they'd self-medicate. They have dual diagnosis. That means they're substance abuse addicted; they have mental illness. They cause lots of problems. They're extremely difficult prisoners and they're in our facilities because we failed at the community level to help get treatment. We had an amendment up here a couple... maybe last week, where we would have taken some money from alcohol taxes and dealt with substance abuse treatment, which affects a huge number of prisoners, which directly relates to crime. And we don't want to do that. So we just say bring on the prisoners; don't make any changes. I've carried bills to look at sentencing guidelines, to try to get to disparities that happen within our system that result particularly in racial and ethnic and actually gender disparities in the way our criminals are processed. We don't want to get to any of the root causes, so we're going to pretend that we don't have prisoners coming in the door and just say, well, we're just going to close the prison. They haven't been creative enough out there, and we're going to take some risks that we're going to have problems in the prisons with overcrowding. We're going to have problems for the people who work there, in safety issues. And I don't think we're ready to do that just because we're frustrated we're spending too much on Corrections in this state. We need to get at the root causes of the problem, and we need to have treatment. We need to have those preventive services that are out in the community. And we could do that. We could do that with Senator Jensen's amendment last week, but we don't want to commit the funds to do that. Never get to it; we've had study after study after study. Senator Brashear's community corrections bill is going to get to part of that problem, but we
