LB 208

have gone, let's make sure that we pass good legislation. And I'll leave that up to others to decide whether this is good legislation. As far as the amendment, I'd like know if Senator Foley would respond to a few questions to clear things up for me. As I go through on the gadget here this morning, all I see is a reference to "unborn child," and there's no definition of what an unborn child is. And I said, well, if a lady had just been to the doctor and she's nine months along and he checks her and says, you're in labor, get over to the hospital, we've got a good baby here and everything is fine, she has an accident on the way to the hospital, well, that I think we could probably all agree that that's an unborn child. But is it an unborn child if the lady had a home pregnancy test and then was in an accident and had a miscarriage? How about the timing of the miscarriage? If it happened two hours after the accident, we might say, yeah, the accident caused it. How about if it's two weeks after? Two months after? And then the other thing that I got to thinking about is, what about the case where the mother was the person who, quote, committed the crime in the motor vehicle, and then she has the miscarriage? So those are the kind of questions that, if you would expand on, I might appreciate it. I'd leave the rest of my time to Senator Foley.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Foley.

SENATOR FOLEY: Yes. Thank you, Mr. President. Thank you, Senator Johnson. Those are all interesting and relevant questions. Those are questions that were explored in some considerable detail last year. I realize you weren't in the body at that time, so you didn't have the benefit of that debate. But the unborn child is defined in statute. It's defined...just from memory, not verbatim...but it's defined as a member of the species homo sapiens in utero, at any stage of development. So we're protecting the unborn throughout all nine months of pregnancy. That answers one of your questions. As for the mother herself, the bill makes clear...the statute makes clear that the mother can never be prosecuted under this statute, never. So there's no question there. And the other questions that you're getting to really relate to matters of proof. And if a...and we discussed this...again, we discussed this at considerable length last year. But miscarriages, as you
