January 12, 2004 LB 172

have been elevated. Yet women are expected to do things that men can never do. They have those children, they do work in the house, they keep the family together. This so-called masculine macho man comes home crying and whining and whimpering, and the woman in the house has to put her other little children aside and take care of this big baby. Then he's going to go out and present himself to the world as somebody who's tough. But whenever he confronts an issue, he collapses immediately. So what are the targets for these kind of bold, brave, John Wayne types? Poor people from...children from impoverished families, pregnant women who are impoverished. So they are opposed to prenatal assistance from the state, postnatal care, assistance to help these women who do have these babies have some kind of chance to bring them up with a modicum of decency when it comes to food, shelter, and medical care. That's when they set their faces like flint. So as long as you're talking about a fetus, an embryo, a zygote, you find them on their hobbyhorse, and they are so passionate, and you just be telling yourself that I know if we look at the laws of that state as they pertain to the welfare of children...

SPEAKER BROMM: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...we're going to find a paradise for children. But such is not the case. They usually are the very ones who come out and vote against legislation that will help the children in being, to use that term. These are young women in being that we're talking about. And we're not talking about letting them get an abortion behind their parents' back. We're talking about giving them some information that will help them make a decision. And whenever people like Senator Foley and others want to keep young women ignorant, it goes back to the truth of what I said. Keep them ignorant and pregnant and in the kitchen. Don't let them get any education. They're going to talk about the Taliban in Afghanistan, and try to compel people in Iraq to put women's rights in the constitution, and those rights don't exist in the American constitution? We tried to get an equal rights amendment in the U.S. Constitution and the Nebraska Constitution, and it was...

SPEAKER BROMM: Time.
