FLOOR DEBATE

January 13, 2004 LR 4

only possibility...

SENATOR HARTNETT: Senator Chambers, that's one...you've got one minute left, and you...this is your third time for speaking.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. If there's a possibility that fairness, justice, and equality will be enjoyed by people situated as I and my people are situated, that possibility exists because there are certain protections and guarantees written into the constitution, even though they often are observed, in the real world, through their breach at the hands of public officials and others. The words are there. They must be protected, they must be defended, and they must be shielded from dilution and pollution. Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATOR HARTNETT: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Friend.

SENATOR FRIEND: Thank you, Mr. President. I would like to ask if Senator Chambers will yield for a question or two.

SENATOR HARTNETT: Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes, I will.

SENATOR FRIEND: Senator Chambers, that letter that you spoke of, Fred L. Morrison, professor of law at the University of Minnesota Law School--Senator Schrock, it looks like you did hand this out. You don't know Fred L. Morrison at the University of Minnesota Law School, do you, personally?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: No.

SENATOR FRIEND: So you can't say whether he, I guess, would be a constitutional law expert, correct?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I could say it, and I could express my opinion, but I'm...here's what I conceded already, that we're going...I'm going to assume that everything in the letter is as it represents itself to be.

SENATOR FRIEND: Okay. I remember you saying that.
