agreement said. As far as polygraph, the power of a boss or somebody to order somebody into a polygraph is a common source of public policy considerations around the country for various people.

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR LANDIS: There's one in here as well. Senator Chambers says no analogy is legitimate; cops are in a position in which they have squandered or maliciously used their powers; they are not entitled to any more due process than the constitution. That is a...that is a position with which there is no need to negotiate, because there is no negotiation. It denies the underlying message of the bill. For those who have a different perspective and say, look, it's not written well, there a profitable conversation could be had. Writing the bill better, that's an interesting idea. That's one I'd be interested in. I don't know about anybody else, I don't know about Senator Synowiecki, he's the principal introducer, but I think writing the bill better is a fair idea. I'd be willing to entertain...listen to that. I think Senator Synowiecki would as well. And, by the way, at 11:43, we're not faced with the issue of do we need to recommit this to...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time.

SENATOR LANDIS: We'll have three or four days to do that, if we want to.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Chambers. This will be your third time.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes. Mr. President, members of the Legislature, there is a term used in the law, sui generis. That means one of a kind or it's in its own little area, it's in its little pigeonhole. That's what cops are. They are a separate group unto themselves. All of these other things Senator Landis mentioned related to the general welfare. In a credit report, any citizen can have access to whatever the stuff is in the file that Senator Landis referred to. When you talk about the whistle-blower legislation, that is not giving employees a
