confidential if the law requires it to be disclosed. A lawyer is required to maintain a client's confidences. But if a lawyer gets information that indicates a person is going to commit a crime or is going to try to...

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...corrupt a witness or is...did you say time?

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute, Senator.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay...or is going to do something, the lawyer discloses that. But if the client has already done something, the lawyer is bound by the lawyer-client relationship not to disclose that because the person is coming to the lawyer for representation. Now, the law could change that. But since the law has not, that's the way it is. So I'm trying to find as many ways as I can to make it clear that the confidential requirement would surround the information relative to the judicial waiver. Other information is outside of the scope of the confidential relationship I am trying to develop. But if anybody has questions or thinks that something else should be stated to make it clear, I'm open to suggestions.

SENATOR CUDABACK: You may continue, Senator Chambers. Your light is next.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh, thank you. I don't know if my colleagues think that any means through the school of giving this information is reasonable. I don't know if enough of my colleagues think that if an amendment such as Senator Schimek is offering is reasonable that the request of the young woman for the information should be held in confidence. I think it should be. There is a reason, a societal reason, for creating confidential relationships. The one that most people hear about is that between a lawyer and a client. That exists in order that the client can be fully forthcoming with the lawyer, so that there are no surprises and the client knows that this is the person to whom he or she can unburden the soul, and nobody will ever know by way of the lawyer telling. When there is a
