February 10, 2004 LB 139A

However, Senator Johnson and I have had discussions, and an amendment which was taken off the bill when I was snowed in in Omaha is going to be reattached to the bill, pursuant to an agreement that Senator Johnson and I have. Nevertheless, I've got to state why I would be opposed in principle to his bill. With the attachment of the amendment, I'm not going to fight the bill. I want that clear. I don't like all these intrusive measures of branding everybody, even somebody who's committed a crime. I saw a movie on television which would show why we should not equate a burglar with a rapist. This woman in the movie was deaf. A guy broke out of jail and came to her house. He didn't know she was deaf; that's how he ultimately got caught, because the phone rang, and somehow she knew it rang, but she wound up on the telephone. And he was listening to see what was being stated, and he was telling her what to say. This tipped off the caller, which I think happened to be somebody at the police station, because the caller knew she could not hear, so there was no way that these responses could be coming from her; somebody had to be telling her, and the only one who could have been doing it was the escapee. Just so you know, this malefactor was brought to justice. In fact, they killed him, and the woman was upset, because they had discussions, and she began to see him as a human being and not that bad a fellow, and didn't want them to kill him. But she couldn't prevail on them not to do so. He happened to be black, so I knew he was going to get killed, because that always happens. And in movies that you watch, if there's a black character and somebody is going to be killed, that's the one killed first. Arnold Schwarzenegger had a movie where a creature that you could not see all the time unless the creature chose to be seen, and this creature started killing some of these people who were looking for him and, naturally, my brother, not my blood brother, my complexion brother was wiped out. We knew that would happen. I'm going to get to Senator Johnson's bill, but I'm kind of a tear this morning. I used to like monster movies, Senator Johnson, because I went to a...it would be called a white school, when I was a child. I never had a black teacher in my life. The most black children in any classroom with me, to the best of my recollection, would have been four, and everything else in the school was white. One of the things they used to like to do--and as I child I didn't get the significance of it--you
