FLOOR DEBATE

February 19, 2004 LR 14

don't like to get up here early in the morning and go on the attack, but recent events make it necessary. You people make me sick. You are so picayune in your thinking. A picayune, incidentally, is a very, very small coin that was at one time circulated in the state of Louisiana. And as a matter of fact, their newspaper is called the Picayune, because that's what it sold for yea many years ago. But anyway, you small-time thinkers, this is a bad amendment, because it doesn't put a price on the honor of the state of Nebraska. We ought to sell out. Why not? Sell out. And I've got the price. They say that everybody has the price. I've got the price. We'll have one casino for $154 million, and we'll call it the E. Benjamin Nelson Memorial Casino. (Laughter) Thought you might like that, Senator Schimek. Actually, it's been noted here that we had horse racing brought into Nebraska. And this was in the thirties and that was the result of a deal. And the deal was that Omaha, for which read the Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben, got horse racing; and the state of Nebraska, for which read George Norris, got the Unicameral. Senator Landis? A question, if I might, for Senator...for Landis.

SPEAKER BROMM: Senator Landis.

SENATOR TYSON: Do I have my history correct, sir?

SENATOR LANDIS: Actually, that's exactly right. And they also had the return of alcohol on the ballot at the same time. And people said, just don't make a mistake; vote yes for everything. And we got alcohol, horse racing, and the Unicameral in the same election cycle.

SENATOR TYSON: Senator Landis, I knew that you knew that, because you're an expert on George Norris. We should at least come up with a price. Now, we owe somebody $154 million. If these people want a casino that badly, let's sell out. Let's show that we're like everybody else, that we've got a price. And this, at least, would be something that would last for a little while. Actually, I...originally, when I put my light on, I was going to ask Senator Smith why he couldn't spell "none." Because it reads right here, from eight to none, except that he forgot the "n." However, the difficulty with having any number
