country and you had to turn right to get to the stockyards. When you saw a flashing yellow light you turned left again and you were in...you were still about three or four miles away from the stockyard. But that's what's happened with urban sprawl, and I wonder if the county vote is the right thing. You know, I've been pondering that for awhile too. Maybe it should be the city that it's in. Naturally, or realistically, anyone who wanted to build a structure like the type we've heard about and seen in other cities, it would have to be in a metropolitan area for it to be a viable place to operate gaming in. Other than the smaller ones that some of the...one of the tribes would probably have, they would be very content with that small an operation to have, and the city that that's in, of course, it's on the reservation, but the town that it's in is a very small town and I would imagine that 90 percent of the people that live in that town probably work at that location or did work there when it was still viable, before it was shut down. So I wonder if it shouldn't be, in some cases or in most cases, just that...just that city where we should...this is something we can...we can probably talk about too. Senator Smith, can I ask you a question?

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Smith, would you yield?

SENATOR JANSSEN: Senator Smith, I don't know if you've been listening or not, but what do you think about that idea, that in a large metropolitan city maybe just the city vote on it?

SENATOR SMITH: Senator Janssen, I think that's a very valid question, and certainly relevant, and I would appreciate the local decision, but I would have to go with the county vote because, really, Douglas County is the only county with...that has one major city covering such a large geographic area.

SENATOR JANSSEN: Uh-huh.

SENATOR SMITH: Now Lancaster County would be very similar, and I don't want to take up too much of your time here, but...

SENATOR JANSSEN: That's all right. We have plenty time.
