from having a contaminated needle used to puncture the earlobe if it had been used by somebody who had hepatitis. Is that what we're being told?

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time.

SENATOR STUHR: No, I'm not. I mean, anything is possible.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And he said our time is up, so thank you, Senator Stuhr.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Your time is up. Thank you, Senator Chambers, Senator Hartnett, whomever time it was. Senator Bourne.

SENATOR BOURNE: Thank you, Mr. President, members. Senator Loudon, I appreciated your comments. It's kind of nice to hear a conservative actually espouse conservative views, and we all have concerns over overregulation in this society, and I think many of us campaigned on less regulation, less taxes, and yet we constantly are asked to pass bills that increase the size of government and increase regulation. So, Senator Loudon, I appreciate your...a true conservative espousing conservative views. I wanted to also comment about the hepatitis C, that this bill would protect individuals from incurring hepatitis C. And I was on the Internet awhile back, or one of my...one of the ladies that works with me was, and there was like a question and answer site on tattooing, and it indicated that the question was, has hepatitis C ever been transmitted by tattooing, and, yes, that has happened one time in the entire United States. And this article indicated that a greater risk is the tattoo artist, himself or herself, having some form of hepatitis and spreading that, but this bill wouldn't protect against that. So again, hepatitis C has been transmitted, one documented case in the entire country. Senator Chambers, would you be willing to continue our dialogue that we had on an earlier time trying to establish a record on this bill?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes, I would.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Chambers.
