FLOOR DEBATE

March 19, 2004 LB 1091

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Oh, I see it. It's c), unobligated grant fund money returned to the state, credit.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: We don't actually have a dollar figure in this language, but I've heard the figure $4 million mentioned, I think,...

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: Well,...

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...in connection with that.

SENATOR WEHRBEIN: For the whole thing is $4 million, but there...the unobligated grant fund would be money that was obviously allotted and wasn't...it didn't follow through with or whatever. That would be some lesser amount, if you're talking about the c) line particularly. I'm not exactly sure what your question is.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Well, let me get past that and I'll come back, because my time will run out. I want to finish the example I was going to give as to what Senator Wehrbein and the Governor are asking us to do. I had talked about the generator on one end and the machine that's going to be run by the current generated on the other, and the wire has a break in it. Well, if you can find something to bridge that gap because the two pieces of wire are not close enough together for the current to jump, you've got to put something in-between the two to transmit the current, to conduct it. So Senator Wehrbein knows I respect him so he says, Ernie, take hold of that, the end of that wire coming from the generator, and Senator Raikes says, simultaneously, take hold of the wire that's running from the machine toward the generator; now take them both at the same time. So I do that and we hear a loud humming, cracking, snapping and popping, or to put it correct, snap, crackle and pop. And as that current passes through me every muscle in my body tenses at the same time. But the muscles that close your
