livestock that they have raised. Senator Wehrbein is correct, we see this differently. I think a child in the presence of an upraised fist is in much greater need of our attention than a child who is trying to get a ribbon for rearing some critter, and that is the argument I propose to make and I'm going to watch to see what the priorities of my colleagues are. And I want Senator Raikes to be aware of the fact that I want to put as much pressure on the Legislature to raise the income tax as possible so it looks as though I will have much help in keeping this bill before us. And when my other colleagues are exhausted, there is no more oxygen in their tank, there is no more ethanol within them,...

PRESIDENT HEINEMAN: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...or their vehicle, at that time I will return. They said that MacArthur promised that, but he didn't keep the promise. A reporter gave me an article that showed that at a later date he did return. I don't know what he did, but I know he got fired eventually. Mr. President, thank you. Colleagues, I wish you well.

PRESIDENT HEINEMAN: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Cudaback.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Mr. President and members, a very, very, very tough issue. You know, I guess that goes to show you, you never, never say never. I didn't vote for this bill out of committee. We had a lot of talk on it, a lot of talk on it. What goes back in your mind when you're doing this and voting something like this, in debate we worked for years getting the state aid, as you all know, from down here to up here. It's working great. Boom! Along came 2001, whatever; we all know what happened. Now we're taking that money back again, going backwards in state aid. But guess what, it's just...I'll make my time short here, but if the schools don't cut back, if we give them less money, they either have to fire teachers, get rid of programs. This morning on a radio program I heard where some schools were considering doing away with libraries. I mean, give me a break. And they always do away with music. You hardly ever do away with sports, naturally, but that's beside
