nothing to do with the interests or welfare of children, does have, in my opinion. Things cost money. Money is spent in the school system to hire teachers, administrators, principals, janitors, secretaries, and others who perform services, but there also are expenditures for a physical plant, for books, supplies and other accoutrements of the classroom. It would be good if every classroom that children in this state entered provided an environment that was conducive to learning, that was child friendly, to use a cliché. That, sadly, is not the case. There are many people who fall into teaching by accident, and because there are other things they might like to do which they are unable to do. Standards relative to qualification are constantly being lowered. There is not a determination of what should be required to be an effective teacher and those who want to teach be required to meet that standard. The standard is reduced to fit people who might otherwise not go into teaching because they're not qualified. I had a...not I had, one of my children had a third grade teacher and she wrote a note home about my daughter. Now, what was being expressed was very complimentary, but when I read it I had to hope that my daughter would not be educated to the extent this grade...third grade teacher was educated by the time she got out of third grade. The grammar was atrocious. I don't know if she knew what the term "agreement," with reference to subject and predicate meant. My daughter's name is Gayla. Gayla are doing very well--that's...the teacher wrote that--Gayla are doing very well. Now if the teacher were writing about me, that might be all right because maybe if I manifested then what I manifest now the teacher would have thought I had multiple personalities and she'd a been trying to get a message through to my parents--you think you've got one person here; well, you've got several and they are doing all right. But this teacher just didn't know any better. I would tell my children that this is not the proper way to construct language. Now, when you all are out there in the yard, you're on the playground and you're just ripping and running and expressing yourself, you do like I do now. When a word ends in I-N-G you'll drop the G. Many people do that. But at the same time, I want you to know how to construct what's considered a proper sentence. I want you to know that. But when it comes to speaking to people, speak however you need to,...
