Transcriber's Office
FLOOR DEBATE

March 24, 2004 LR 209

SENATOR SCHROCK: Twenty percent.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Twenty percent. Now if some money is going to be earmarked from the lottery, but the city, and we're talking about Lincoln, we may as well say it, is having to come up with a match, do you think it would be unreasonable to require them to have a 20 percent match because they're going to get all of this guaranteed money from the lottery forever?

SENATOR SCHROCK: I think it ought to be fifty-fifty, but that's just my opinion.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Hey, you're starting to get in my ballpark now.

SENATOR SCHROCK: Yeah. Remember, I'm voting for the constitutional amendment to protect my domestic tranquility with my roommate, so.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: With your roommate? Who is your roommate, Senator Schrock?

SENATOR SCHROCK: I share an apartment, when we're down here, with Senator Cudaback, for what that's worth.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Oh! Here's why I asked. Because the last thing I read in the paper was that Senator Schrock said he was answering a question; he said, I nod a lot because I'm married. So I just wonder who the roommate was and whether or not she was from Lincoln. But now we got it straight on the record. His roommate is not his spouse. But, anyway, I think that a bigger percentage should have to be given by Lincoln.

SENATOR JANSSEN: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: They're getting a windfall, a windfall, unearned. So that's an amendment that's up there, but we've got to dispose of this one first, unless my good friend Senator Landis is going to invoke cloture now. Thank you, Mr. President.
