FLOOR DEBATE

March 30, 2004      LB 868

But anyway, I'm going to...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time.

SENATOR BRASHEAR: I think you're right.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...and I'm going to turn my light on because I'm kind of...

SENATOR CUDABACK: You may continue.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...rushing you because of the lack of time.

SENATOR CUDABACK: You may continue, Senator Chambers. Your light is next.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Mr. President. Now, Senator Brashear, I will slow down. We have before us a bill which is going to allow teachers to give injections to children based on some training they receive. They are given immunity unless their act or omission is willful or wanton. My view, and I stated it before you came, is that comes pretty close to an intentional act. Willfulness means not just negligence where through inadvertence or inattention you do something. You are aware of what you're doing. Your will and knowledge are involved and you do it anyway. And my view is that where a child is involved and the child is facing a potentially life-threatening situation anyway, we ought to impose a very high standard of care on anybody who is going to minister to that child. If we allow the person who is ministering the child to not even exercise due care, then the child's life is placed at stake, at risk, and we're saying, by law, you, who are ministering this child, do not have to exercise due care, and you're not liable. I don't think that makes any kind of sense. I would like to ask Senator Raikes a question before I might ask Senator Brashear another one on the liability itself.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Raikes, would you respond?

SENATOR RAIKES: Yes.
