talk until I think of something to say, because I have no idea what is going to come out of my mouth, but I'm just really, really frustrated. We have been working on these budget bills for a number of hours now. We have had proposals to raise the gas tax, to put a surcharge on electricity, to do something with the sales tax, the income tax, and so forth. Nothing has passed. I don't know what we do. We're...we know that we're going to have to pay this judgment for the low-level nuclear waste. And we all say, well, let's just do nothing. Let's wait and see what the price actually is. Some of the people that have spoken against some of these various issues won't even be here next year. They don't even have to worry about this next year. The rest of us are going to. I have had conversations with the Governor, not today, not this week, previous years, on raising the property tax, allowing schools to charge more for their local patrons to pay for their schools. Granted, I know we have to have education and we have to pay for it. But why should it always fall to the greatest share on the property taxpayers? It seems as if you...when you have a high income, you don't want to pay income tax. If you are fixed-income or low-income, well, we know that sales tax is regressive. Well, yes, maybe. But there is, to a point, a way that you can determine how much sales tax you're going to pay. If you want to go to the dollar store and buy your jeans for 10 bucks, which I do, the sales tax is 70 cents. If you go to one of the higher-end stores and you pay $52, the tax is, I think, $3.64 or thereabouts. So there is a difference. And you can limit what you're going to pay on sales tax. Same way with if you go to Weird Wally's and buy a basic transportation car, or you get the latest high-luxury model off the lot, there's going to be a difference in sales tax. We don't pay sales tax on food. Maybe we should think about that. With a credit, of course, to the lower-income people. I don't know what we're going to do. When I have income, I don't mind paying income tax, because it means that at least I made some money that year. But if we're going to come back next year and say, well, now we have to raise the property tax...or the levy back up to $1.10, that is going to hit a certain amount of the population just as hard, or harder, because there is no way that we can pass those costs on. We pay sales tax. We pay income tax. We pay property tax. But the 49 of us now have decided, well, we don't want to pay this one, we
