move forward with that. Let me also say this. During the course of the interim, we asked repeatedly of committee staff from every standing legislative committee to review all statutes that addressed an age of majority issue and respond to us with concerns. There were some committee staff--I think it was based on their employment with former committee Chairmen--that were extremely responsive, extremely responsive, that said, think of this, do this, we've run into this before, we thought about this, this is an area that is okay. There was some constructive ideas. There were some that never responded, so we went after them and asked them, what are your concerns, do you...have you looked at this? After those discussions, then we got some more information that was then used to craft some of the language that's before you in the committee amendment. So this wasn't done behind the scenes. This was done open, and in front of all these committees that Senator Chambers pointed out. Senator Chambers has a valid concern. We are changing public policy. Now, these young people up in the balcony may be in the age of 18 years old, and some of them may be 19. Senator Jensen said, well what happens if you lower the age of majority to 18 and a high school student turns 18 and is legally an adult? What do his parents do with him? I turned 19 when I was a senior in high school. What did my parents do with me? They said, you live in our home, you abide by our rules. That is already a problem today. So some of the concerns that are there will be a concern in the future. Our discussion I think is appropriate as far as the concerns and the idea. We're trying to come up with a solution that we think makes a measured step. We're looking at the committee amendment. But I think when we're talking about this discussion, it really helps to make sure that we actually talk about what's in the bill. So again, we're not changing the gambling age, as Senator Jensen referred to. We've already got a problem in the state of Nebraska of young people turning 19. We'll probably have that problem in the future, depending upon what age we set for entrance into school, as far as that, as well as high school athletics, which is a big reason why some kids get held back in some parts of the state, so they can continue to participate in athletics. And finally, we did this with the assistance, or requests, of every committee staff, every committee counsel, every standing committee in this legislative body. So we have done the research. If you have
