FLOOR DEBATE

April 7, 2004

LR 11

Smith, are on your side. One of them is on my side. So don't tell me about the loud voice in the lobby because the loudest voice is coming from your side. But I didn't...I didn't get up here to have a debate with you. I really got up here to point out a few things that are in this little group of flyers that I sent out, and I know I said I wouldn't do any more handouts, Senator Smith, but this is not my bill anymore. It's Senator Janssen's bill, so I decided I could do a handout or two. One thing I really want you to look at right at this minute is the map of the Indian reservations in Nebraska. And you will notice that there are actually 16 tribes that have land in Nebraska but only four of those tribes are federally recognized Nebraska tribes. And so those are the only ones who could possibly build a casino in Nebraska. But in addition to that, I keep hearing about all these tribes that are going outside the reservation and getting land for casinos who knows where. That just doesn't happen and I asked my staff to research it because it's been a while since we've done it. And I brought this up on the floor not too long ago but Senator Smith keeps returning to this idea, and so do other people, of expanded Indian gaming all over the place. Well, since 1988 when the Federal Gaming Act was passed, only three tribes in the whole United States have been able to get land or get gaming designations for land outside their reservations. And they are Forest County Potawatomi, near Milwaukee, Wisconsin; the Keweenaw, a Indian community in Marquette, Michigan, and the Kalispel Indian Tribe, and I don't know if I'm pronouncing this right or not, near Spokane, Washington. The others have all been federally recognized within their own reservation. So all this hysteria about the tribes...

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR SCHIMEK: ...is really kind of pointless because, first of all, the Winnebago and the Omaha tribes already have casinos over in Iowa. They are not going to build a casino in Nebraska. The Ponca tribe's land is up in Knox County. You can see it's very small, and that's their, basically, the ceremonial land and they're most likely not going to build something there right next to the Santee Reservation. The only one that might possibly have a use for this anymore are the Santees and they
