April 8, 2004 LB 32, 958

wondering if they...in business administration...who are wondering if they ought to continue it, because it had no great value anyway. It was a fad, like so many other things, where, since business was the mantra of the day, people thought any degree they had that was associated with business would get them an entry into that mystical area. But it's been found out now that people with those degrees might be hindered by them rather than helped. So the degree itself is ridiculed. You all have seen the television commercial where this guy with the MBA is sitting at the computer, and he can't work it, so the lady comes, and he tells her, well, I have an MBA; she says, oh, no wonder, let me help you. This concept or notion that businesses should be exempt, that the country exists for business, that the legislatures are beholden to business, is something I do not subscribe to. They are people trying to find a way to make as much money as they can, while assuming no responsibilities of citizenship. Sixty percent or greater of the big businesses in this country pay no income taxes; 70 percent of the foreign corporations doing business in America pay no income tax. So when people stand on this floor and express such concern and worry about businesses, they lose me immediately. So I'm going to put a motion on this bill. If it looks like others are going to start pulling off so that it can move in 30 minutes, that won't happen. I'm going to fight this bill. I'm going to fight Senator Foley's bill. Senator Jeanne Combs has pulled a couple of my fangs on her bill, because I think she's entitled to discuss it, as is anybody, but there will be a little different approach, if we get to that bill. But frankly, I believe that LB 958 is going to take the rest of the day. So I'm kind of doing my warming up, Senator Friend. You know, if a guy comes into the ring and he is not sweating, he's not ready to fight, because he's not loose, and he probably will get knocked out in the first round. Well, I'm doing my shadowboxing, my sparring, preliminarily to getting into the real battle that we all know is awaiting us on what I call the, quote, here we go again, unquote, bill of Senator Foley. I'm opposed to this bill, and I will do all I can to...

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...make sure that we don't act in haste this
