LB 958

SENATOR FRIEND: I...I'm not sure, well, I'm not even going to talk about Rommel. Senator, I...what I was getting at is this, and then I'll...and then I'll let the conversation go in the direction that I think some of the folks want it to go. I have a huge problem with the direction we've gone in this country in the last 25-30 years with...from a...from a legislative standpoint and a judicial standpoint when it comes to this issue. What I'm...I...what I'm asking you, and this is all from me so, I mean, I just...it's all out of my own mind, which is pretty scary, what's the difference between substantive due law and the penumbras? I mean, help me out with that. Or is there a difference or are the same thing or what?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: I don't know what...I don't know what the terms...I don't know what that is, I genuinely don't.

SENATOR FRIEND: The bill...it...okay. Are the bill... Roe v. Wade, didn't the judges go in, look at the situation, look at the Bill of Rights and say, well, look, the Bill of Rights, in essence, create this, you know, either a right to privacy or the substantive due process? Am I wrong about that? I mean, tell me how that...tell me how all that broke. Were the...were the ideas behind the right to privacy created by these judges?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Friend, I haven't read the decision recently so there are specifics in it that I couldn't tell you, but the idea is that a majority of the judges reviewed the constitution and determined, by studying it, that there is a right to privacy, that a pregnant woman has meaning, that when her pregnancy is at various stages the state, in the early phases, the first trimester, will have no right to interfere at all; cannot do anything. Then, as you go along, there are some points where the state can intercede to protect the woman. There is a further stage of development where the state can take an interest in the welfare of the fetus, so they divided the pregnancy into three trimesters, although that is not developmentally exactly the way a fetus would proceed.

SENATOR FRIEND: Thank you, and I see where you're going here. I...what...I guess what my feeling is, and I'm going to give you the rest of the time here if there's enough to try to convince
