FLOOR DEBATE

April 8, 2004

LB 958

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...against consuming certain substances, but if the woman consumes that substance, certain types of food even, or somebody gives her that food, I'm...I don't believe that there could be any prosecution against the person who gave her the food. I do not believe that whoever produced the food could be sued successfully because it resulted in some harm to a pregnant woman or her fetus. Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Thank you, Senator Chambers. Senator Friend, and this will be your third time, Senator.

SENATOR FRIEND: Thank you, Mr. President. Members of the Legislature, that logic that I just heard in the exchange between Senator Foley and Senator Chambers, Senator Chambers' logic there was very dubious, more dubious than his love...his blind love for Erwin Rommel. Let me tell you why. What Senator Foley was referring to is if a guy raised his hand and you had the appropriate persuasive people to say, hey, when did you deliver this lethal, you know, dose or this type of solution in order to do this harm, and the enforcement officers could actually determine when this was ingested, slam dunk. I don't know where that logic is going and maybe Senator Chambers could speak to that. But I would like to hear, if Senator Foley would like, I will yield the rest of my time to him because I would like to...if he'd like to carry on the conversation with Senator Chambers, I'd like to hear it.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Foley.

SENATOR FOLEY: Thank you, Senator Friend. I think Senator Chambers' point, and he can speak to this in his own way, but I think his point was that a prosecutor could never prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the deformity that we now see in the born child was the direct result of the ingestion of the chemical seven, eight months ago, whenever it might have occurred. And I think that...and I think there are cases where it would be very difficult to prove that, surely. But I also think that you might find the case, an extraordinary case perhaps, but I think you might find a case where you could prove that, where the facts and circumstances and the evidence is available where a prosecutor could prove that a malicious person administered a
