FLOOR DEBATE

April 13, 2004 LB 613

SENATOR FOLEY: They may live in separate homes, and had a fight,...

SENATOR BRASHEAR: But they must have that relationship in order for it to come under this...

SENATOR FOLEY: Right. Right. But I'm...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time. Thank you, Senator Foley. Senator Maxwell.

SENATOR MAXWELL: Thank you, Mr. President. Just very quickly. The main reason I asked for a machine vote and voted against adjournment last Thursday was because I wanted to get to Senator Mossey's legislation. I'm glad he's pursuing it. I thank Senator Bourne for providing his bill as a vehicle to get it across the finish line. And I support the procedural steps necessary to get this accomplished. That's all. Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Thank you, Senator Maxwell. Senator Chambers, on the germaneness rule.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Mr. President, members of the Legislature, on a motion to return, a motion to suspend, we generally will discuss the bill itself, to give people a reason to give the parliamentary or procedural votes. When a society becomes aware of a particular evil or harm, and it is not adequately covered under the existing law because it is in a narrow category of its own, and you see that that particular problem persists and is becoming increasingly severe, a wise society, through its legislature, will craft a law that recognizes the existence of that relationship, the problems that arise peculiar to that relationship, even though similar problems may occur someplace else. It is the nature of this relationship that spawns the problem, so you provide the protection where the problem exists. I'm glad that it was pointed out that the geographical location of the crime does not determine the nature of the crime. It is the relationship that exists between the parties. There is a definitional section in Senator Mossey's bill, so that the
