April 15, 2004

that I thought, you know, this is kind of silly; what is what? I don't know, so I left it blank. About two weeks later, I got the answer back from the college and said, you sent an incomplete questionnaire; therefore, you're not eligible to come to our college. I was disappointed, obviously, as anybody would be, but I took it in stride and continued working. The next year I thought, well, I can try it again because the questions will be different and they'll be more reasonable, so I applied again. The questions came and they were about history, they were about English, they were about agriculture, they were about mathematics, a whole variety of questions. But guess what? The last one was the same question: What's what? So I pondered it and I thought, this is silly. I don't know the answer, so I will say that, and on the questionnaire I wrote...I answered most of them as best I could, and the last one I replied I don't know. Well, obviously, the questionnaire came back and said, because you don't...you've spent a year and you still haven't decided what's what, (laughter) you don't belong in this college, so you're not going to be accepted. Well, you know, that broke my heart, honestly. In fact, I cried. I cried. And as I left the post office that day I met a young girl who I had admired in high school and I wanted to go with so bad but she never would pay any attention to me, and she said, what's wrong, Floyd? And I said I'm brokenhearted. I tried to get into college twice and they turned me down, and I'm not going to get to go. And she said, well, you know, don't feel bad. I'll tell you what. My folks are going to go on a picnic. Why don't you go home and get your bathing suit and I'll get mine and we'll go down and we'll have a nice meal and afterwards we can go out on the lake and row around and we'll talk about life and what you think you're going to do in your future. And I said, yeah, well, that's not too bad. So I said, okay. So we did. We got in the boat and we were floating around and as we were, she leaned over the side and that little strap that went around her neck kind of dropped down and part of her feminine...femininity was exposed (laughter) and I said...you know, I was a country boy, I said, what's that? And she said...she said, what's what? (Laughter) I said, if I knew the answer to that, I'd be a sophomore in college. (Laughter) So now you know why I didn't go to college. Again, I want to say thank you very, very much to all of you people and the time we've spent there, the
