LB 425

SENATOR STUTHMAN: Senator Jensen, do we have programs currently in effect that would help Native American women with fetal alcohol syndrome? Do we have that, or do they just service or work with people that are not Native American women, or don't we have a problem like that?

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Jensen.

SENATOR JENSEN: Senator, we do have a program that was passed several years ago that we put a half a million dollars, $500,000, a year into Native American health, and that was a bill that was passed when Senator Wesely was Chairman, and it still goes on, a half a million dollars a year; $100,000 for each tribe and then $100,000 goes for urban Native Americans, which would be probably either in Omaha or perhaps some of the other communities where there's a heavy Indian population. But we're presently putting out, like I said, $100,000 per tribe, $100,000 for urban Native Americans.

SENATOR STUTHMAN: Thank you, Senator Jensen. So that does tell me that we have, the legislative body has, committed extra money to Native American women for health.

SENATOR JENSEN: Well, I don't know.

SENATOR STUTHMAN: We have done that, the way I understand right now.

SENATOR JENSEN: Well, it's for health.

SENATOR STUTHMAN: So the thing that I'm concerned, you know, are we trying to do something more than what we've got already? You know, I think they already have...have maybe an advantage over the average person, because I'm sure that throughout the state of Nebraska there is a lot of fetal alcohol syndrome, irregardless of race or color. I think we have that. And the thing about it is, you know, yes, we're trying to make a high priority. Are we going to...when we do this, are we going to take a portion of the priority and make them a low priority? Because when you...when you increase something to a higher
