FLOOR DEBATE

January 20, 2006 LB 72

Legislature, say, such and such a person ought to die?

SENATOR STUHR: Probably not.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Probably not, or absolutely not?

SENATOR STUHR: (Laugh) Absolutely not.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: That's what I thought you'd say, Senator Stuhr. I think my time is probably up for this time around, so I'm going to put on my light and then let you know where I'm going. Have you watched Perry Mason's movies ever?

SENATOR STUHR: Yes, I did, years ago.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: And sometimes the lawyer would be asking questions, the other side would object, and the lawyer would say, Your Honor, I'm going to connect all this up, and the judge would say, very well, proceed, but I'm going to keep you on a short leash. You've heard or seen scenes similar to that, haven't you?

SENATOR STUHR: Yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Okay. How much time do I have, Mr. President?

PRESIDENT SHEEHY: 1, 14.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: One minute and fourteen seconds? Thank you. I'm sure Senator Stuhr is aware of this, but I bet my colleagues aren't. This bill mandates that a person...

PRESIDENT SHEEHY: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...shall expire on October 1 of each odd-numbered year. It's bad enough to require the person to die, but it's remarkable that you would require the person to do it October 1 of each odd-numbered year. So I guess that means the person dies, comes back alive, at least on an odd-numbered year. But I can't completely deal with the issue now, so I'll
