FLOOR DEBATE

January 20, 2006 LB 72

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Beutler, which do you think carries a greater amount of responsibility, forgetting that carrying a gun allows you to kill? Lay that aside. On which would be reposed the greater responsibility: a person who is a security guard maybe working in a grocery store, or a person who sits on the Board of Regents governing the university system of a state?

SENATOR BEUTLER: Could you restate that, Senator?

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Yes. Upon which of the two do you think greater responsibility and obligations would repose: a security guard who might be working in a grocery store, or a person who sits on the Board of Regents of a university system? Shall I repeat it again?

SENATOR BEUTLER: Well, Senator, considering the breadth of responsibility in the case of a regent, I might say the regent.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Should we put a greater responsibility on a security guard than we do on a member of the Board of Regents?

SENATOR BEUTLER: No.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Senator Beutler. That's my feeling, too. Why should we not require a regent to have ethics? And we've got people on this floor trying to defend one of the most unethical people walking, let alone merely sitting on the Board of Regents. Honesty. Does not honesty apply where somebody sits on the Board of Regents? I'm talking about David Hergert, in case some of you all don't know. And I know there are people on this floor who supported him in his campaign, and it shows how poor their judgment is. And they feel, having made that blunder, they got to stick with it now, but I don't. It sticks in my craw, and I've got to talk about it from time to time so the public knows that Senator Chambers has not forgotten it. But there are certain activities going on outside the Legislature which, in a general informal way, we have agreed to allow to run their course. But I want to keep it before us. Professionalism. You don't require professionalism from David Hergert. That scoundrel, that criminal, that self-confessed
