FLOOR DEBATE

January 20, 2006 LB 72

SENATOR STUHR: That's right.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Senator Stuhr, can you understand my puzzlement, not that they would want that in their bill, not that you would put it in their bill, but my puzzlement that a profession like that would want higher standards as a minimum than the standards we require for people who sit on the Board of Regents? Can you understand why I'm puzzled about that apparent disconnect?

SENATOR STUHR: Yes.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Senator Stuhr. And I am puzzled. I'm going to tell these young people sitting in front of me, these pages, if you want to make it, cheat. Cheaters win. When I was growing up, they used to have the expression cheaters never prosper. When we were shooting marbles, cheaters never prosper, cheaters never win. Well, now you see the cheater got the biggest prize when it comes to the education system. They say crime doesn't pay. He has admitted to violating statutes that are criminal. Crime paid for him. There are a lot of honest people who didn't cheat on their exams, who wrote their own term papers, who didn't look at somebody else's paper, who did not carry little electronic gadgets that they could use to cheat with, and they barely make it through school. See, you all aren't smart. If you want to win, if you want to succeed in America, at least in Nebraska, cheat, cheat, cheat; lie, lie, lie; violate the law. You need practical education, and David Hergert gives it to you. You sit in those classrooms and listen to these professors talking up in the clouds, and maybe if these professors would do a little cheating they wouldn't be getting that minuscule...

PRESIDENT SHEEHY: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...salary, by comparison, and they'd be pulling in the big bucks, like David Hergert does when he welshes on contracts, when he operates his businesses in such a way that there are foul odors and explosions, when he has people on the legislative floor supporting him and defending him and saying, they don't know whether anything ought to be done about
