terrorists from Iraq attacking them. Do you know that 80 percent, over 80 percent of the Americans think that Iraq had something to do with what happened September 11, 2001? Even the CIA told them, fools, no, they had nothing to do with it.

SENATOR BAKER: One minute.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Nothing whatsoever. So why, then, did Bush attack Iraq? Well, because he wanted to, and Israel wanted him to. So he did it, and now they got in some mess that they don't know how to get out of, and these people are dying every day. And don't talk about the hundreds of thousands, literally, of Iraqis who have died. In every war, by the way, far more civilians than military persons die. That's not unusual, but to have this many deaths, when there is no war between combating forces, is highly unusual, because the lives of Iraqis count for nothing. But Americans are paying and paying and paying. They created a wasteland and called it peace. That's what the Father of History wrote many, many, many years ago.

SENATOR BAKER: Time, Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATOR BAKER: Senator Brown, you're recognized to speak.

SENATOR BROWN: Mr. President, members, Senator Chambers has spoken a great deal today about a young man from Arnold that was killed, and that young man is the son of one of my classmates from Broken Bow High School, and it is a tragic situation. And the family has been in the Custer County area for several generations. Their grandfather...great grandfather, grandfather, father, and the boy all had this same name. And this boy is the last of that lineage of the family, and so I just wanted to say something about that. I have been asked by several people how someone who at least lived for a part of their life in Broken Bow cannot be supportive of a bill like this. And so I'm going to speak somewhat humorously, but in the Sandhills, my cousins and the people that I know like big guns, the kind that everybody knows that they have them. They like them so much they put them in the back of their pickups. I
