March 24, 2006 LB 994

say, I can't do that in public. Why should I have to do it? She said, look, I carried this baby for nine months; you can carry it for 30 seconds across the street. Well, at any rate, under the balcony to my left are Geneva Kitching and her son, Brian Michael Kitching. Ms. Kitching works with us in the Transcribers Office on the tenth floor. And I don't want to embarrass the young man, but there are a few things that I'm going to say this morning. He enlisted in the army in April of 2002. He completed his basic training at Fort Benning, Georgia, and his advanced individual training, known in military parlance as AIT, as a forward observer at Fort Sill, Oklahoma. He moved on to Fort Campbell, Kentucky, and after completing air assault school, he was deployed in March of 2002 with the 3rd Brigade of the 101st Airborne Division to Afghanistan, where he received--and this is what impresses me, among other things--the green and gold scholarship to complete his college education and become a commissioned officer. He returned from Afghanistan and earned his bachelor's degree--and this would make Senator Raikes proud, if he was here--in economics. So when he gets over his military responsibility and functions as competently as an economist as he has during his military career, we're going to see that deficit drop, we're going to see the economy mushroom, and he might--but I would advise him against it, because he'd take a salary cut--be considered to be President of the United States, which will be a much better place, thanks to him. Now he graduated--Senator...I don't even see Senator Brashear, but he likes us to pronounce these Latin terms correctly--he graduated magna cum laude and as a distinguished military graduate in May of 2005. He then went on to serve at Fort Lewis in Tacoma, Washington, where he was an evaluator of future army officers in the Leadership Development and Assessment course. With what he has done, you'd probably expect to look back there and see an old graybeard such as myself, but that is not the case, if you look back there. Upon completion of his training at Fort Lewis, Second Lieutenant Kitching attended the infantry officer basic course at Fort Benning, Georgia, after which he graduated from the U.S. Army Ranger school. He is preparing to move to Fort Bragg, North Carolina, where he will serve as a platoon leader in the 82nd Airborne Division.

SENATOR CUDABACK: One minute.
