LB 1248

We have not had an active role in the changes in this plan other than when we had money we expanded the program, and when we didn't have money we reduced the program. And that is not effective management. That's a crisis. And so what we have done is we have gone through this process of saying, we have funding, let's go ahead and do this; or, we don't have money, let's go ahead and cut people off to get to a number, and that's not effective management. But what is effective is where you create alternatives and you find cost savings. Senator Cunningham's proposal is to try to figure out a way for us to encourage individuals to engage in a Long-Term Care Partnership Act, and that's important, because as individuals take advantage of that, it removes them or it moves them out of direct funding from the Medicaid program specifically, and allows for those limited funds to be used in other ways. So it creates a incentive for the citizen to be responsible for themselves, meeting this new opportunity under federal law that has just been recently opened, and allows them then to provide for their own and, at the same point, provide the same limited resources to be used for either other services or for providing better services to those that would be still in the system. Those are some of the alternatives that are out there. Another idea that was discussed in the reform process is the home care option. We're saving money by allowing individuals to stay in their home, in a less intrusive environment, in a more comfortable environment for them, and it is more...

SENATOR BAKER: One minute.

SENATOR ERDMAN: ...cost-effective. It's cheaper, and it's a better quality of care for those individuals who can be there, if they're placed appropriately. It saves money. That's how you moderate cost, is that you find alternatives to what we're currently doing that still provide the quality of care. But again, this process outlines what we should be doing as far as management. Now, management is part of the responsibility of the executive branch, the day-to-day operations. Management is also our responsibility as far as what the underlying policy should be. The process that's outlined, as far as whether or not they're changing the priorities, whether they're changing or expanding or reducing benefits, or increasing or reducing
