to make art and its appreciation available to young people throughout this state. Would you rather they throw a brick through a window, or paint a picture on a canvas? Set a house afire...well, I don't have to give all those analogies, because if people don't see value in things,...

SENATOR CUDABACK: Time, Senator.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: ...they're not going to see it no matter what I say. Thank you, Mr. President.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Thank you, Senator. Senator Schimek.

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Thank you, Mr. President. Senator Chambers, I would be willing to give you time, if you want it.

SENATOR CUDABACK: Senator Chambers.

SENATOR CHAMBERS: Thank you, Senator Schimek. Members of the Legislature, I'm having a great amount of trouble within myself over our unwillingness to give this small amount of money for something that I deem to be so important. I have been in churches before, I don't go now, and I see stained-glass windows which can be considered artistic in nature because they depict scenes supposedly from the Bible, and some scenes that are just supposed to be restful. Some churches have murals on the walls. Others have paintings in frames that are hung on walls around the building. When you go in state capitol buildings all over this country, you see artwork. If you walk through those doors back there and look on the floor and look on the ceiling, you see artwork. Those are the things that say something about the people who were here, something about what they deem to be important. And there might be times when Senator Don Pederson will talk to young people about the value of art, when maybe even my good friend Senator Smith, when he's in Washington, looking at all that stellar artwork in the Capitol Building will talk about how inspiring it is. If that is the case, why can't we spend this small amount of money? Maybe you all are too old to remember how excited your children were, if you had children, when they produced the first thing that they thought of as a good picture. We forget too many things. We ought to try to
