LB1059 creates a new crime for using or installing a mobile tracking device without consent, including tracking software placed on a person's electronic device, and requires the device to be removed once consent is revoked.

Violations are generally a Class I misdemeanor, with a Class IIIA felony penalty in specified situations such as prior related convictions, an applicable protection order, or a history of violence. The bill also updates stalking penalties by allowing prior stalking convictions to enhance a new stalking offense without a seven-year limit and by adding the new tracking-device offense as a basis for felony enhancement.

The Supreme Court states that there will be a minimal fiscal impact from LB 1059, but no additional resources are required.
