Nebraska’s Legislature is one-of-a-kind among all the state legislatures in the United States of America. The Nebraska Legislature is made up of one legislative house called a unicameral. All other states have legislatures made of two houses, or bicameral legislatures. Nebraska was the same for much of its history. For 67 years, Nebraska had a bicameral legislature, which contained a senate and a house of representatives. That changed in 1934 when Nebraskans voted to make their legislature a unicameral system.

Senator George Norris

U.S. Senator George Norris is known as the founder of the Unicameral because he led the effort to change Nebraska’s bicameral legislature into a unicameral legislature. Norris, who lived in McCook, wore out two sets of automobile tires driving across Nebraska campaigning to change the Legislature. Norris said having a two-house legislature was outdated, inefficient and unnecessary. He said having a one-house legislature not only would be more efficient, but it also would cost less and make the legislative branch more open to citizens.

Checks and balances

Not everyone was in favor of changing the Nebraska Legislature to a unicameral system. Opponents said that with only one house, there would be fewer safeguards to prevent the Legislature from hastily passing laws. However, Norris said there would be plenty of other checks and balances in the unicameral system to prevent this. Norris argued that the Nebraska Supreme Court would still issue rulings on laws passed by the Legislature, and the governor would still be able to veto bills, or reject bills, so that they do not become law.

More importantly, Norris said, citizens would have the right to vote for members of the Legislature and to place issues on the ballot for state elections. Also, the Unicameral would have easy-to-follow rules and allow greater access to the news media so the public would be more aware of the Legislature’s activities.
No Political Parties

Besides being the country’s only unicameral, the Nebraska Legislature also is unique because it is the only nonpartisan state legislature in the country. When candidates run for the Nebraska Legislature, the political party to which they belong is not listed on the election ballot. Norris worked to eliminate partisanship in the Legislature because he believed nonpartisanship would allow lawmakers to base their actions on their own beliefs, rather than according to party beliefs.

No Conference Committee

In a bicameral legislature, a bill must be introduced and passed in both houses in order for it to become law. However, sometimes the version of the bill that is introduced in one house is different from the version introduced in the other house. When this happens, bicameral legislatures rely on conference committees to work out the differences between the two versions of the bill. Conference committees are made up of members from both houses of a bicameral legislature.

Norris opposed conference committees because he said they often did their business in secret. In Nebraska’s old two-house legislature, once a bill came out of the conference committee, it could not be changed; it could only be approved or rejected. Sometimes, Norris said, the bill that came out of a conference committee did not resemble either version of the original proposal. Norris argued that a unicameral legislature would eliminate the need for the conference committee.

Immediate Results

Nebraska saw immediate results in both cost and efficiency after citizens voted to replace its bicameral legislature with a unicameral. The number of legislators went from 133 in the two-house system to 43 in the unicameral system—nearly a 70 percent reduction. The last bicameral session in 1935 ran 110 days, passed 192 bills and cost $202,593. The first unicameral session two years later ran 98 days, passed 214 bills and cost $103,445.

Nebraska Legislature Facts

- How many hours must you attend school?
- On which side of the road should you ride your bicycle?
- Is your cat or dog required to have shots for rabies?

The answers to these questions are determined by rules that people must follow, or laws. These rules are created by lawmakers in the Nebraska Legislature who are called senators. They make laws only for the state of Nebraska.

- There are 49 senators in the Nebraska Legislature. Each senator represents one district that has about 35,000 people living in it. You live in one of these 49 districts.
- Senators are elected by citizens and serve four-year terms. About half of the Legislature is up for election or re-election every two years. To be a state senator, you must be at least 21 years old, have lived in your district for one year and be a registered voter.
- The Nebraska Legislature is a citizen legislature, which means most of its members have other jobs in addition to serving as a state senator. Senators receive $12,000 a year for serving in the Legislature.
- Our Legislature meets once each year in a regular session. The regular session in odd-numbered years lasts 90 days and the regular session in even-numbered years lasts 60 days. These legislative sessions begin at 10 a.m. on the first Wednesday following the first Monday in January.
- Sometimes, senators are called back to the Capitol in Lincoln for a special session. The governor is given the power to call special sessions between regular sessions in order to handle emergencies.
• The Legislature has committees, or small groups of senators, that review proposed laws and study issues. Every bill introduced in the Legislature has a public hearing in committee. Public hearings give citizens and others the chance to present their opinions about proposed laws. Those opinions help senators decide whether laws should be passed and, if so, what the laws should say.

• There are 14 standing committees that meet regularly during session. These standing committees take action on bills presented to them. There also are select committees and special committees that handle issues not covered by standing committees.

• When you visit the legislative chamber in the State Capitol, among the people you will see are the lieutenant governor, the Clerk of the Legislature, and the sergeant-at-arms.

• The lieutenant governor serves as president of the Legislature and presides over daily legislative activity.

• The Clerk of the Legislature is responsible for recording what actions the Legislature takes, counting votes and administrative tasks.

• The sergeant-at-arms and assistants, commonly called red coats because they wear red jackets, are responsible for security on the floor of the Legislature and at public hearings during the session.

Like you, visitors from all over the world come to Nebraska to see the Unicameral Legislature and find out how it works. Other states have considered changing to a one-house legislature, but none have done so. As a Nebraskan, you are unique because of the Unicameral Legislature and its influence on your life. You can get involved by speaking or writing to your senator, testifying at a public hearing or receiving information about the legislative process or a specific bill.

Lawmaking in the Unicameral

The lawmaking process in Nebraska officially begins when a senator introduces a bill, or a proposed law, into the Legislature. But the lawmaking process actually begins much earlier — when a senator develops ideas for new laws. An idea for a new law may be suggested by anyone: concerned citizens (including students!), special interest groups, state agencies or the governor. The idea must be introduced by a senator to be formally considered by the Legislature. Committees debate and propose amendments to bills, and the full Legislature has an opportunity to debate each bill at least two times before its final passage. Senators may propose amendments to alter the bill at each stage of debate.

Here are the steps a bill must take before becoming a Nebraska state law:

1) Research

First, a senator and his or her staff research a problem and study ways it could be solved. A senator may introduce a bill to create a new law, or to get rid of or change an existing law. Research is done during the period between sessions called the interim. During this time, legislative committees study a variety of issues that have been identified by the Legislature.

2) Drafting

A senator brings his or her idea for a new law to a bill drafter, who works with the senator to transform the idea into the proper legal form for a bill. Unlike some states, bills introduced in Nebraska may contain only one subject.

3) Introduction

Most bills are introduced during the first 10 days of the legislative session, which begins each January. In order to introduce a bill, a senator files it with the Clerk of the Legislature. The Clerk reads the title of the bill into the record, assigns it a number and prints copies of it for public and legislative use.

4) Committee Hearing

After a bill is introduced, it is sent to a committee. The committee holds a public hearing, in which citizens have a chance to express their opinions about the bill to committee members. Their comments are recorded, transcribed and become part of the official committee record.

After the public hearing, the committee members consider whether they think the bill would make a good law. If they do, they advance the bill to the next step in the lawmaking process. If they don’t, they indefinitely postpone the bill. They also can take no action on the bill, which also would cause it to die. The committee also can suggest changes to the bill, called amendments, and then advance the bill to the next stage.

5) General File

If the committee advances a bill, it goes to the general file stage. General file is the first time the full Legislature has the opportunity to debate and vote on a bill. Senators also can propose amendments they think will make a bill better. It takes a majority vote of the Legislature (25 votes) to adopt amendments and to move a bill from general file to the next stage of consideration.

Before a bill is sent to the next stage, it goes through enrollment and review. Commonly referred to as “E&R,” enrollment and review is a process in which adopted amendments are combined with the original bill, and the bill is checked for technical and grammatical accuracy.

6) Select File

Select file is the second time the full Legislature debates and votes on a bill. This step allows senators another opportunity to amend, compromise and reflect on the proposed law. In select file, a bill may be indefinitely postponed or advanced to the next stage. If senators vote to advance a bill from select file, it is again sent to E&R to be rechecked. The bill is then reprinted and advanced to the next stage.
7) Final Reading

Final Reading is the third and last time a bill is considered by the entire Legislature. The Nebraska Constitution requires that before a bill’s final passage, the entire bill must be read aloud by the Clerk of the Legislature. This happens unless three-fifths of the Legislature (30 members) votes not to do so.

A bill may not be amended or debated during the final reading stage, but it may be returned to select file to be amended.

Usually, it only takes a majority vote (25 senators) for a bill to be passed in final reading. However, some special bills need more votes to pass the final reading stage. A proposed constitutional amendment requires a three-fifths vote (30 senators) to place it on the general election ballot in November and a four-fifths vote (40 senators) to place it on a primary or special election ballot. A bill with an emergency clause requires a vote of two-thirds (33 senators) of the Legislature. We’ll learn more about the emergency clause later.

8) Governor

After the Legislature passes a bill in the final reading stage, it goes to the governor for his or her approval. The governor has five days, excluding Sundays, to decide what to do with a bill. If the governor signs a bill or declines to act on it, the bill becomes a state law. The governor may veto a bill, and can line-item veto, or strike specific budget items.

The Legislature may override a governor’s veto, although it takes a vote of 30 senators to do so.

9) Effective Date

Most bills passed and approved by the governor become law three calendar months after the Legislature adjourns for the year. However, bills may take effect before that date if they contain the emergency clause. An emergency clause allows a bill or a portion of a bill to take effect immediately after the governor signs it or after the Legislature overrides the governor’s veto.
As a citizen, you may contact your state senator about laws being considered by the Legislature, laws already in place or an idea for a new law. One of the best ways to communicate your ideas or concerns is to write your senator a letter. This guide includes a postcard that you can use to correspond with your senator.

Write your senator’s name, district number and home address on the front of the postcard below. Then write your message on the back. Tear the postcard out of the book, place a stamp on it, and drop it in the mailbox.

If you would rather send an e-mail, go to www.nebraskalegislature.gov/senators/senator_list.php and select your senator from the list.

Amendment - a proposal offered to a legislative bill that changes its original intent or language.

Bill - the document that contains a proposed law, referred to as a legislative bill (LB).

Clerk of the Legislature - an officer of the Legislature who handles all administrative functions related to legislative business. Positioned at the front of the legislative chamber while the Legislature conducts business, the clerk records activity and counts votes on issues.

Committee - a panel of senators that makes preliminary decisions about legislation or other issues and reports its findings to the entire legislative body.

Committee Chairperson - a senator chosen to direct the activities of a committee. Committee chairpersons normally are elected every two years by a vote of the entire legislative body.
Constitution - a document that states the basic principles and laws of the state, determines the powers and duties of government and guarantees certain rights to Nebraska citizens.

Constitutional Amendment - similar to a legislative bill, a constitutional amendment is a proposal to change the state’s constitution that must be approved by a vote of citizens.

Final Reading - the final voting stage of a bill or constitutional amendment during which the document may be read in its entirety by the Clerk of the Legislature.

General File - the first debating and voting stage of a legislative bill or constitutional amendment by the entire legislative body. Bills on general file may be amended, returned to committee, indefinitely postponed or advanced to select file.

Hearing, Committee Hearing or Public Hearing - a scheduled meeting of a committee at which the public has an opportunity to voice its opinion about proposed legislation.

Indefinitely Postponed - refers to when a bill is killed, which means no further action on the measure is expected.

President - another name for the lieutenant governor, who normally presides over legislative floor debate.

Select File - the second debating and voting stage for a bill or constitutional amendment by the entire legislature. Bills on select file may be amended, returned to committee, indefinitely postponed or advanced to final reading.

Speaker - a senator who is elected by the other members of the Legislature to handle administrative functions such as setting the daily agenda of floor activity and scheduling work days for legislative sessions.

Unicameral - name given to a one-house legislature, as opposed to a legislature that is divided into a house and a senate.

Veto - return of a bill by the governor to the Legislature without his or her signature, usually accompanied by an explanation as to why the governor thinks the bill should not become law. The Legislature must vote to override a veto within five legislative days after the governor returns the bill.

Compromise

Bills can be complicated, some totaling over 1,000 pages! A single bill can propose several ideas for changing law, and many senators may not agree with each of the proposed changes. Other senators may think they have a better way to accomplish the same goal. In order for a senator to be successful, he or she must be able to work well with the other 48 senators. This often requires the ability to compromise, or agree to some things you may dislike in order to get some things you really want.

Complete the exercise below to learn more about the value of compromise.

Exercise:
1) If your class were to share a pizza, what kind would you get? Write down your favorite pizza, including the toppings you prefer.
2) As a class, debate what type of pizza the class should select. Take individual turns to explain why your pizza proposal is best.
3) Vote on your pizza proposals. Take the three proposals with the most votes and allow students to debate which one of the three should be picked. Allow time for students to make compromises among themselves, then take a final vote.
4) Discuss as a class why compromise was difficult to achieve. What are the benefits of compromise?
